

Gerard Butler doesn't take his celebrity status seriously

Scottish actor Gerard Butler, who gained fame after starring in '300', is not carried away by his new found stardom and says he is just like anyone else.

TheSunco.uk quoted him as saying: 'You're still the same person who has to deal with getting out of bed every morning, going to the toilet, taking a cp, whatever.'

'I think there's a part of you that always imagines that if you encounter success, every fibre of your being will change. You know your whole cellular structure will change. And you will suddenly think and feel and behave like a different person.'

He added: 'And you don't. You're still, 'Oh, so and so didn't call me' and 'Fk, I have to take care of that bill.'

Butler will be seen in Madonna's husband Guy Ritchie's next movie.
