

'Baby Spice' gets Christmas card from British royals

Former Spice Girls star Emma Bunton, who receives an annual Christmas card from British royals - princes Williams and Harry - says this year she wants to send one back to them.

Contactmusic.com reports that the pop singer, also known as 'Baby Spice', first met the young princes during the height of her career in the girl band. They were in their teens then.

Prince William also famously admitted to having a poster of Bunton on his wall.

Bunton said: 'I get Christmas cards from the princes, signed William and Harry. I always get so excited. This year I'm going to try to send one back to Buckingham Palace.'
